Course Introduction

This 10 day course demonstrates how airworthiness and safety regulations are controlled in Hong Kong. It explains how airworthiness and safety regulations are administered and provides an overview of the regulatory processes and procedures employed by the Civil Aviation Department of the HKSAR (CAD).

The course examines how CAD ensures compliance with applicable airworthiness requirements by individuals, manufacturers, operators and maintenance organisations. These activities are presented within the international regulatory framework established by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and the European Union Aviation Safety Agency (EASA). Upon completion of the course, participants will have a comprehensive understanding of airworthiness regulations and the practical implementation of regulatory compliance.

Who Should Attend

This course is suitable for aviation personnel who require an overall understanding of how airworthiness and safety regulations are administered in Hong Kong. It is particularly beneficial to personnel from airlines, air operators, maintenance organisations and parts manufacturers.

Course Objective

To enable participants to understand how airworthiness and safety regulations are structured and administered in Hong Kong, how CAD's regulatory processes and procedures ensure compliance, and how these are aligned with ICAO and EASA requirements, thereby enhancing participants' capability in managing airworthiness and safety in their organisations.
